HISTORY RÉMILLY

Rémilly is a real border between the marshy plain to the south and the Morvan to the north. Occupied since for a very long time, this village has preserved numerous remains from the Gallo Roman period, such as the communication routes in perfect condition. The present-day church of Rumiliacum replaces the old building from the dedicated to Saint Bartholomew. At west of the village, along the D981, is the site of Apponay (the mountain near the waters). In 1185, Thibault, Bishop of Nevers, gave this farm to the children of Saint Bruno. Over time, the Chartreuse d'Apponay has expanded. In 1520, it was ravaged by fire; in 1570, destroyed by the Calvinists.

On the eve of the Revolution, this order had a large territory. In 1790, following the confiscation of the church property, the long history of the Carthusians (six centuries) came to an end. There are only remains, visible from the main road. This site cannot be visited. You can still enjoy the various historical and tourist sites such as the Mud Pond, the castle of La Verrerie, the Tower of Bost, the castle of and the church of Rémilly with its recently renovated Way of the Cross.
